THE PEDLAR'S CARAVAN

I wish I lived in a caravan,
With a horse to drive, like the peddler-man!
Where he comes from nobody knows,
Or where he goes to, but on he goes.

His caravan has windows two,
And a chimney of tin, that the smoke comes through;
He has a wife, with a baby brown,
And they go riding from town to town.

Chairs to mend, and delft to sell !
He clashes the basins like a bell;
Tea-trays, baskets ranged in order,
Plates, with alphabets round the border.

With the peddler-man I should like to roam,
And write a book when I come home:
All the people would read my book,
Just like the Travels of Captain Cook.

Test 15

(1x 8 = 8 marks)

Read the following text and answer the questions given.

Raju's bookselling business was an unexpected offshoot of his search for old wrapping-paper. When people bought something he hated to see them carry it off in their hands. He liked to wrap it up nicely, as well as he could, but his father said, "If anyone brings a piece of paper, he is welcome to wrap up anything; but I can't do it for him. Profit being what it is, we can't afford to spend it on wrapping-paper. If a man buys oil, let him bring a pot to carry it in. Do we provide him with that?" While he practiced this philosophy it was impossible for anyone to find even a scrap of paper in their shop. After his death Raju adopted a new policy. He made it known far and wide that he was looking for old papers and books, and soon gathered a big dump. In his off-hours he sat sorting it out. During the interval between trains, when the platform became quiet, there was nothing more pleasing for him than picking up a bundle of assorted books and lounging in his seat and reading, occasionally breaking off to watch through the doorway the immense tamarind tree in the field. He read stuff that interested him, bored him and baffled him. He read stuff that pricked up a noble thought a philosophy that appealed and gazed on pictures of old temples and ruins and new buildings and battleships and soldiers and pretty girls. He learned much from scrap.
